Preface and warning.

I started to draw when I was a little boy. In High School I was constantly in trouble because I was always being caught drawing instead of studying. That would often lead to serious physical punishment by the teachers at my high school in Pretoria, South Africa. I did have a great, and I must say, beautiful dark haired art teacher who I was in love with. (She did not know it, of course)

Eventually, I became an art director in the advertising business working at many ad agencies in South Africa, England and here in Los Angeles. My drawing skills came in very handy at work especially before the days of the computer. I was able to quickly sketch out storyboards and ad ideas for presentations etc. So, my drawing was a tool I used at work every day. Often when I changed jobs, I would pretend I couldn't draw because I would end up having to do everyone else's drawings.

A few years ago started drawing just for the joy of it. Sort of like when I was at school but thankfully without the punishment. So I started doing a drawing or two every day, even when I wasn't in the mood. It was a lot of fun and I was getting encouraged by my friends and family. I always loved drawing women and realized that if I ever put a little book together I would have enough women drawings to make it worthwhile. So here it is.

WARNING: Some images are a bit naughty and not exactly politically correct. Many of my nudes are nude. If you find yourself offended, step outside, have a good sneeze and enjoy the rest of your day.

Girl with small dog.

Drawn in Antibes, France, where everyone has a doggie.

Pencil on paper. Approximate size 7" x 7"

Girl.

Yes she is.

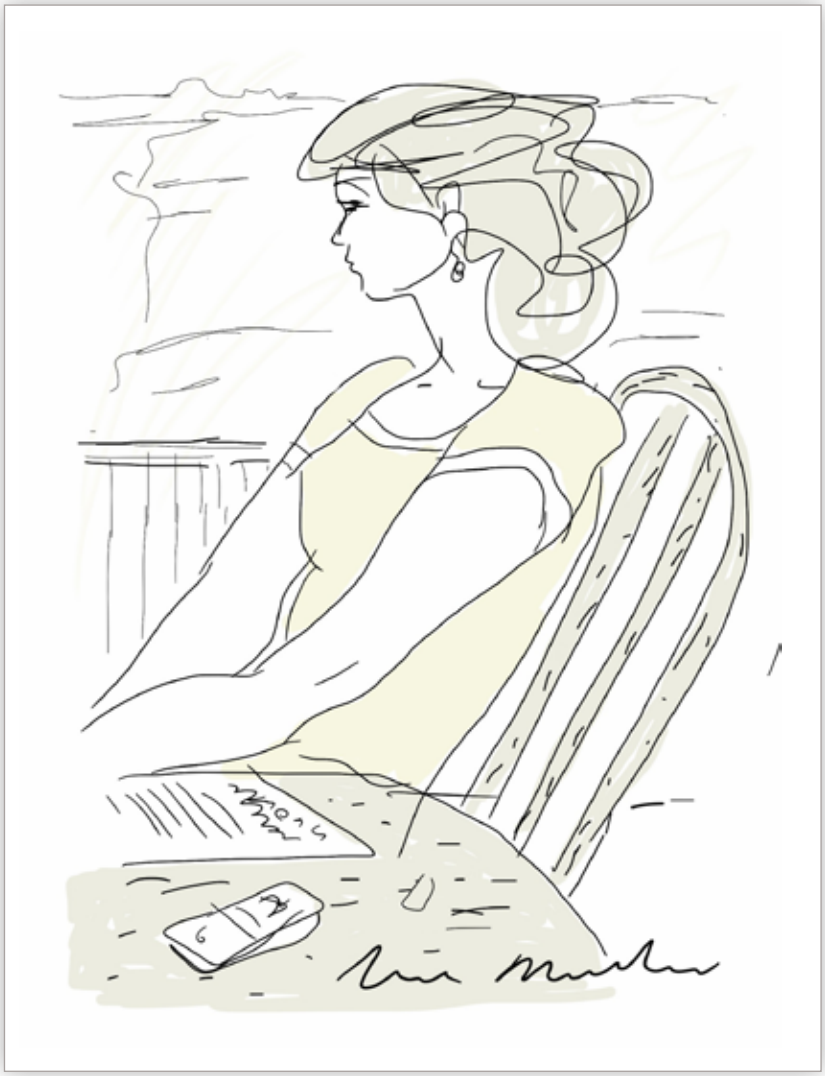
Pen and pencil on paper. Approximate size: 6" x 6"

Easy on the eyes.

Drawn from memory on my iPad one early morning. (But not too early)

A looker.

Digital drawing on an iPad.



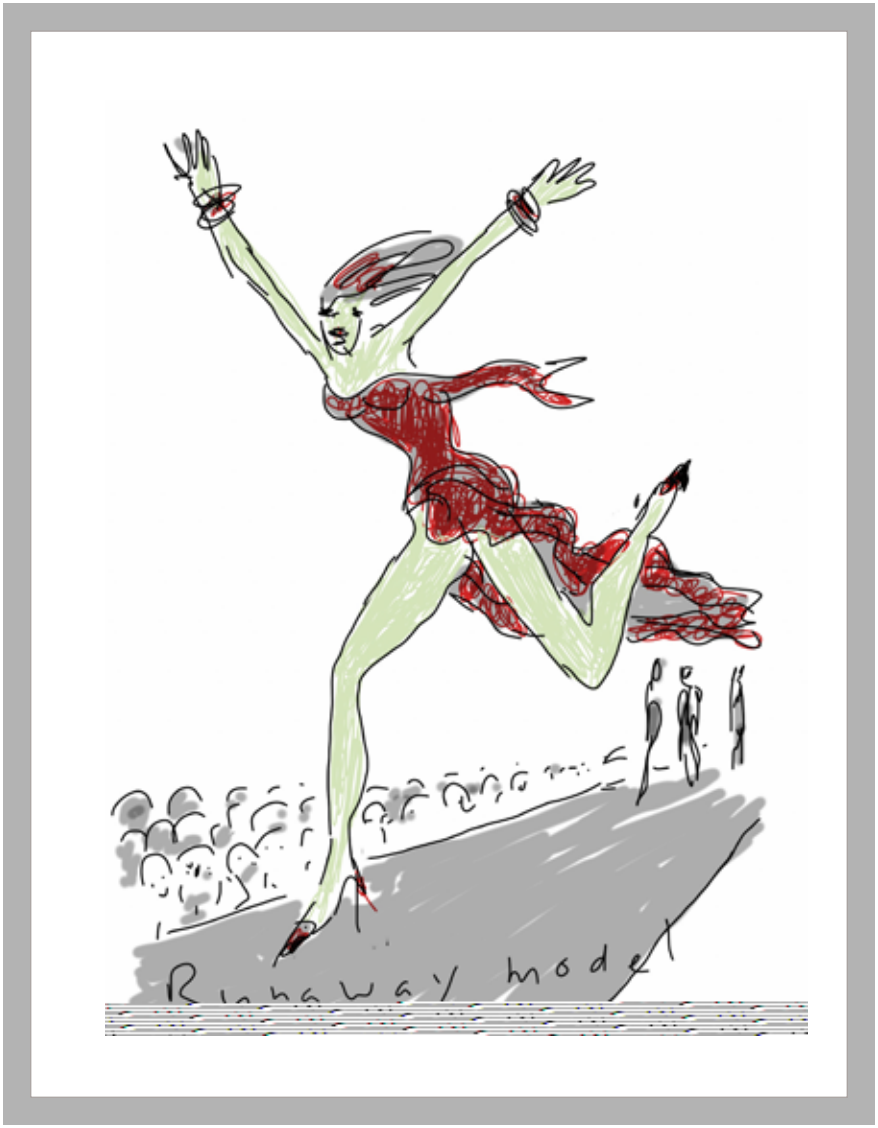
Girl with menu.

She's waiting to order because her lunch date has not arrived.

She's wondering if she should call or not.

I thinks she's going to order a small salad. Not sure.

Digital drawing on an iPad.



Runaway model.

Some models are hard to keep.

Digital drawing on an iPad.

Riding her Schwinn to stay thin.

No helmet. No ugly riding gear with logos all over it. No leash on dog. No regard for local laws.

Perfect.

Digital drawing on an iPad.

Animal control.

The dogs think they are the pack leaders, but they are wrong.

Pen and ink on paper. Approximate size: 8" x 10"

Girl on diving board.

It's about making decisions.

When you dive there's no going back.

That's the beauty of it.

Digital drawing on an iPad.

French woman with her dog.

Strutting for a better world.

Pen on paper. Approximate size: 6" x 5"

Posing for a better tomorrow.

N

Pen and ink on paper. Approximate size: 10" x 13"

Prancing to make the world a better place.

Digital drawing on an iPad.

If lips could talk.

Pen and watercolor on paper. Approximate size: 3" x 4"

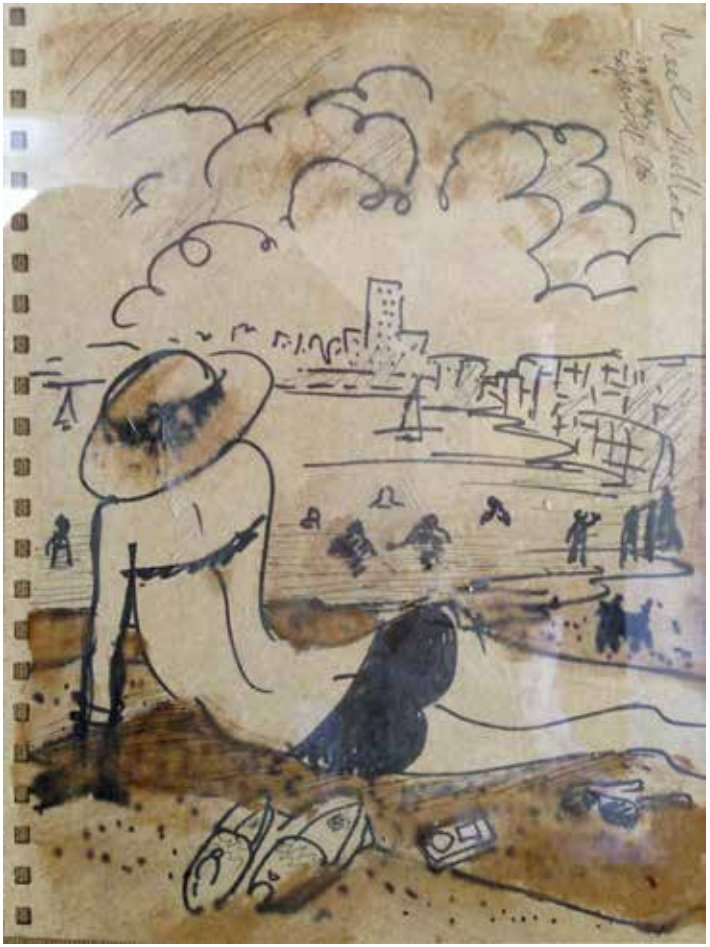
The hat wears her well.

Pen and ink on paper with color added digitally. Approximate size: 3" x 2"

Woman waiting for her dog to stop barking.

She's a yapper. The dog I mean.

Pen and pencil on paper. Approximate size: 6" x 4"



Girl on beach in Antibes.

Someone said her sandals look fishy.

Pen and watercolor on paper. Approximate size: 9" x 12"

Sitting pretty.

I drew this under duress for some stupid Sony Pictures ad project that never materialized.

At least I got paid for it.

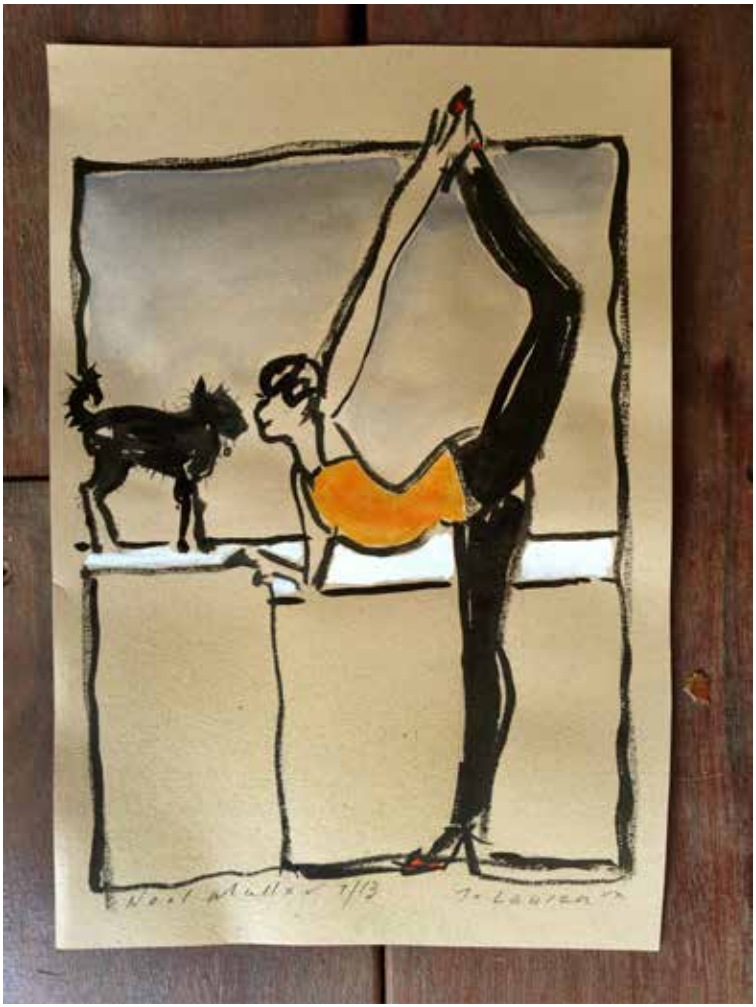
Bathing beauty in Antibes.

She never got into the water knowing that the luxury yachts nearby flushed their waste into the ocean.

Pen and ink on paper. Approximate size: 7" x 5"

Sitting pretty.

Brush and ink on paper. Approximate size: 16" x 18"



Lauren, the amazing yoga teacher, and her dog Koko.

Making it look easy.

Ink and watercolor on paper. Approximate size: 7" x 9"